Developing a Message

During an emergency event, it is paramount that information be timely, accurate, empathetic and caring, pertinent and credible. Additionally, risk communications should disclose what is known and explain the risks, acknowledge any uncertainty, and recognize fears. Risk communication should not dismiss fears or over-reassure any audience about the disaster. It will be important to give people specific actions to take, and make their personal responsibilities clear. By delivering sound and thoughtful communications, we can help prevent ineffective, fear-driven, and potentially damaging response to a serious crisis such as a bioterrorism.

Your First Crisis Message Should Address:

1. Statement of empathy or compassion (must come within 30 seconds)
2. What we know now (who, what, when, where, how)
3. What we don't know (why?)
4. The process (what we're doing to get additional information)
5. Our commitment (when we expect to have updated information)
6. Where to go in the meantime (usually Web site or call center)

What is a "Message"?

Simply said, a message is an overarching theme supported by three or four (and no more) significant points. Most often, a "message" communicates underlying values, not just information. Facts and figures, however, are key elements in supporting the message.

Why Do We Need A Message?

In an emergency, crisis or risk situation, a message is absolutely necessary in order to convey concerns, values, empathy, compassion and to establish credibility and authority. A message gives you a framework and by developing your message you can better control your communications with the media – and the public.

Developing Key Messages- Things to Consider

- The very first communication is the most important communication during an emergency event
- Do not wait until you have all the answers before you start to communicate
- Keep information simple & accurate
- Acknowledge the emergency, crisis or risk
- Express concern, empathy and compassion for victims, families and the community.
- Recognize peoples' fears – but do not over-do it, "feed" or "fuel" it
- If you don't have all of the information, say so – but let the media know when you'll get back to them, and then get back to them.
- By being fast & accurate, you establish your credibility with the media, identify your department as the "go to" source for information and begin to manage the public's response to the event

Part II: The Joint Information Center (JIC)

Elements of a Message in Emergency Event

In an emergency, crisis or risk event, the message includes an overarching theme (concern, empathy, compassion) and three major points with supporting facts. Make sure to keep the information simple and accurate. If you don't have all the information right away, say so -- but let the media know when you'll get back to them with updated information.

Be mindful about how much information people can absorb at any one time. This is particularly true during an emergency event, when people are emotional and upset. Address what the public needs to hear, even more than what you want to say. Adjust your response and message accordingly by thinking about tone and wording.

Acknowledge the crisis by expressing concern for victims, family and community. Do not overlook how important it is to express sympathy and empathy, as well as to acknowledge people's fears. As soon as possible, put a statement of concern on the Web site and address the emotional side of the event at the beginning of a media briefing or update.

Don't try to allay the panic people will be feeling by avoiding bad news. Panic does not necessarily come from bad news; it is more likely to come from no information, conflicting information or misinformation from authorities. Provide the best information you have in a clear and confident manner.

Element #1: Situation

“What has happened?”

- What happened?
- When did it happen?
- Where did it happen?
- How and why did it happen?
- Who is involved?
- Do we know the cause?
- What's going to happen next?
- Were there any injuries? How many people were affected?
- Was there any damage?
- Is there any current danger or ongoing danger?

Element #2: Risks during a Public Health Emergency

Who is at risk? Who is at the greatest risk?

- What are the signs/symptoms?
- Is it contagious, communicable and/or spreading? How?
- Are there effective treatments?
- What are they?

Part II: The Joint Information Center (JIC)

---

Element #3: Actions

What actions are being taken by Public Health?

- How is the Public Health Department responding to the event?
- What is being done?
- Who is doing it?
- Why is it being done?
- How is it being done?

What actions should you and your family take?

What does the public need to know and/or do?

- How do I respond?
- How do I protect myself/family?
- How can I get more information?
- How can I help?
- When will there be more information?
